It was the pennut woman of demnity in 1872.

In the Orient the conditions of female life among the poorer classes are in some respects botter, but in others worse, than they are in the countries spoken of. The people of the East never hurt themselves by overwork under any consideration. The woman are not called upon to provide the bone and sinew of every extra-laborious occupation as they are in Garmany and Austria, for the pressure and exactions of military life are less crushing. But, on the other hand, woman is not to be regarded more in the nature of goods and chat-tels belonging to that fordly loafer, the unspeakable Oriental, than as an Independent and responsible being. -Thomas Stevens. in N.
